ired standard, but to clear off the deficit in at four years. It has, therefore, been a considerable disappointment to find, from the statements given and extorted during the late session, that, though the new taxes have yielded together about £600,000, only about £150,000 been laid by to pay off the deficit, and the ASSEMBLY asks to be allowed to appropriate this for the current expenses of the present session.

The Parliament and the country is, therefore, more face to face with the old alternative trenchment or fresh taxation. The revenue, plus the new taxes, is only just about enough to meet the present rate of expenditure, and the public outlay has crept on year by year, has swallowed up the increment of revenue.
 The package duties, too, which were only imposed for a time, lapsed at the end of last year, and their defect requires to be made good. So that to pay off the still overwhelming deficit, as well as to keep square for the future, it is necessary to contrive somehow that there shall be an annual surplus for several years of course, those who have not the responsibilities of government call out for retrenchment. Some members of the present Government have shouted out this cry as lustily as —when they were in Opposition. But, notwithstanding the perpetual protestation of point, it has been found hitherto practically impossible to effect any such retrenchment as appreciably ease the revenue, and will warrant the necessity for fresh taxes. So that a dozen different Ministries having been tried, and all having failed to effect this proposed reform, the country has fallen into the Government has a furlough for two months, to consider what it is to do under the circumstances. To propose fresh taxes is a an unpopular process, and is especially cal[on] the eve of a general election. The ers must fall upon somebody, and if they are e at all productive they must fall upon the at bulk of the people. There is no possible against which most forcible arguments can-be urged, and nothing but the absolute

...many look to the extension of municipal institutions as a check upon the central expenditure, and an Act facilitating municipal government was one of the useful measures of the last session. The multiplication of local govern-

It is undoubtedly a step in the right direction, and will ultimately relieve the general misery. But it will not operate immediately, and will not be available to meet present necessities. Its operation will be gradual. The people have for years past been trained to look to Government for everything. It will take to cultivate the spirit of self-reliance, to meet present emergencies there, must be a very vigorous retrenchment, or some moderate extra taxation. No great amount of additional revenue is required. A small sum judiciously guarded, and rigorously applied to the purposes for which it is levied, would an-present needs. But, the difficulty is when is, are in abundance, to use them charily.

 In a young country there are interminable demands on the Government for expenditure.
 There are a thousand and one things which are very desirable, and which those who hanker

Government is beset on all sides for money, it is as much obliged to yield to pacifists as to accommodate friends. Refusals, ever politely couched, are nearly always accompanied by diminished political support, or by the threat of it. Difficult it is for Governments to impose taxes, it seems still more difficult to keep-session of the proceeds of new taxes. It is vague feeling as to the indefiniteness of their taxation that excites alarm in thinking the. The country is not really oppressed at present with taxes, although the cost of govern-is large as compared with the population. There seems no definable limit to this cost. Every fresh task the Government takes in hand is the way for another. Every fresh reform introduced involves some fresh permanent expenditure. Every fresh Cabinet has some schemes intended to secure popularity to and to confer some grand advantage on the colony, but all of them are in requiring some immediate outlay. A really economical Government must be unpopular, and an unpopular Government must be short-lived. And so no one is able to fix a limit to the annual expenditure.

Almost any reasonable scheme of taxation could be accepted if there could be an accompanying guarantee that there should be no new taxes for the next ten years.

filled with much interest the plants, fruits, and other things. Lady Belmore was shown through the exhibition. Mr. Bennett, the secretary, and a member of the committee, and she expressed her gratification much that day. Yesterday was the third day of the society's session, and it appeared to be quite as numerously attended, as on the two preceding days. The weather was good and the show had also the attraction of a fine band of music. The visitors appeared to take an inefficient interest exhibition. We may mention that Mr. Christie, of Parramatta, sent a good sample of minerals to the exhibition yesterday, and also that the name of Mr. C. Williams was omitted from the prize list. Mr. Williams awarded a silver medal for his handsome collection of red and marbled woods. The exhibition will be open this morning, from 9 o'clock. Invitations have been sent to the officers and men of the 60th Regiment, and to officers and crew of the different ships of war in harbor.

KING'S RECEPTION BALL: BAND OF THE GALATEA.—His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh kindly placed the band of H.M.S. Galatea at the disposal of the civic authorities for the ball which is to take place on Wednesday evening next, the 6th of February, in Pavilion in Wynd Park. This splendid band, commanded by Mr. J. W. Foxall, consists of thirty-five members, and includes the following instruments:

The Volunteer band during the evening. It is understood that the band of the 60th Regiment would have been called to take part in the indispensable musical performance on this occasion, but that it was considered necessary to assign them to accompany the guard of honour appointed to receive his Royal Highness at the Pavilion. The timbre of the roof of that building has already been resounded with cannon fire. This train-for covering the Producers' Market at the Haymarket—was only landed in the colony on Wednesday last, and has there been temporarily, and most judiciously made use of by the city authorities, because they evidently determined that "the Citizens' Ball" shall go off with the greatest possible effect, wholly independent of any remote contingencies of a disagreeable or a favorable weather.

INCIDENT.—We understand that His Royal Highness they intend being present at an evening to be given on Tuesday next, the 4th instant, at

Of course, those who have not the responsibilities of government call out for retrenchment. Some members of the present Government have shouted out this cry as lustily as when they were in Opposition. But, understanding the present financial position, it has been found hitherto practically impossible to effect any such retrenchment as appreciably ease the revenue, and will prevent the necessity for fresh taxes. So that a dozen different Ministries having been tried, and all having failed to effect this proposed reform, the country has fallen into a kind of scepticism as to the possibility of retrenchment, and awaits uneasily the prospect of still further taxation.

The Government has a furlough for two months, to consider what it is to do under the circumstances. To propose fresh taxes is a most unpopular process, and is especially so on the eve of a general election. The must fall upon somebody, and if they are to fall on all productive they must fall upon the bulk of the people. There is no possible argument against which most forcible arguments cannot be urged, and nothing but the absolute necessity of keeping up public credit will secure general assent to new impositions. Many look to the extension of municipal institutions as a check upon the central expenditure, and an Act facilitating municipal government was one of the useful measures of the last session. The multiplication of local governments is undoubtedly a step in the right direction, and will ultimately relieve the general treasury. But it will not operate immediately, and will not be available to meet present necessities. Its operation will be gradual. The people have for years past been trained to look to Government for everything. It will take time to cultivate the spirit of self-reliance, and to meet present emergencies there must be a very vigorous retrenchment, or some terate extra taxation. No great amount of national revenue is required. A small sum is carefully guarded, and is applied to the purposes for which it is levied, would answer present needs. But the difficulty is when funds are in abundance, to use them charitably. In a young country there are interminable demands on the Government for expenditure. There are a thousand and one things which are very desirable, and which those who hanker them think are really essential to progress. The Government is beset on all sides for money. It is as much obliged to yield to pacifists as to accommodate friends. Refusals, even politely couched, are nearly always accompanied by diminished social and political cooperation, or by the threat of it. Difficult as it is for Governments to impose taxes, it seems still more difficult to keep possession of the proceeds of new taxes. It is a vague feeling as to the indefiniteness of their taxation that excites alarm in thinking the country is not really oppressed at present with taxes, although the cost of government is large as compared with the population. There seems no doubt that the first of the fresh tasks the Government takes in hand is the way for another. Every fresh reform introduced involves some fresh permanent expenditure. Every fresh Cabinet has some schemes intended to secure popularity to itself, and to confer some grand advantage on the colony, but all of them tend to require some immediate outlay. A really economical Government must be unpopular, and an unpopular Government must be short-lived. And so no one is able to fix a limit to the annual expenditure. The only almost any reasonable scheme of taxation could be accepted if there could be an accompanying guarantee that there should be no new taxes for the next ten years. with which much interest the plants, fruits, and other things. Lady Dolmore was slow through the exhibition. Mr. Drummet, the secretary, told her a number of things, and she expressed her gratification at such that was shown. Yesterday was the third day of the society's exhibition, and it appeared to be a very successful one, as on the two preceding days. The weather was not so good, but the show had also the attraction of a fine band of music. The visitors appeared to take an interest in the exhibition. We may mention that Mr. Charles Williams, of Parramatta, sent a good supply of arrowroot to the exhibition yesterday; and also a number of fine specimens of arrowroot. Mr. Williams' arrowroot was omitted from the prize list. Mr. Williams was awarded a silver medal for his handsome collection of arrowroot and 'mashed' wood. The exhibition was closed this morning, from 9 o'clock. Invitations have been sent to this, officers and men of the 60th Regiment, and the officers and crew of the 'Hibernia' and the 'Hague.' The band of the 60th will be in attendance again to-day, and it is expected that the band of the Galatas will perform.

THE REVIEW.

FRIDAY, 24TH JANUARY.

About forty to fifty thousand persons assembled in the Domain last Friday afternoon at the review of the volunteers and voluntary corps of the Royal Highways and Roads of Edinburgh. The review itself was doubtless a matter of considerable interest, more especially to visitors from the country, but the attendance so vast a multitude the infinitesimal edifice to the presence of the Prince, to the demonstration of his authority must have been very striking. The parapets and battlements of the battlements north-west corner of the Domain were lined with thousands of soldiers. Scores of adventurous on-lookers were perched on all enclosures the Parliament Houses; others climbed the branches of the trees, and every eminence was occupied by spectators. The heavy carriage drives near the water circle of the crowd were not occupied by soldiers and horsemen. The concourse of so large a number of soldiers would, under any circumstances, be an exciting sight, but the Domain has never been the arena where splendid spectacles than that presented by the thousands with standards waving in the yarding afternoon. The body seemed to be dressed in India duff, and the shade of color combined with the brightness and the green of the landscape to form a very pleasing picture.

At a quarter-past 3 o'clock the man were ordered off, preceded by the Volunteer band, accompanied by the Major-General, and along Macquarie Street, and into the Outer Column by the Mounted Infantry, the Volunteer Cavalry, the Volunteer Artillery, the Volunteer Infantry, the Volunteer Engineers, the Volunteer Brigade near the fence on the north side of the ground formed up at right angles with the main column. The soldiers of the regulars were then given space to within fifty yards of the northern fence, the Volunteer Artillery being compelled to form in line (on the south) at right angles to the line, facing the north, and the Naval Artillery in line on the north, forming the northern extremity of the line of Rifles in a north-easterly position. Royal Highness was enthusiastically cheered at every of his progress. As the party reached the saluting battery, the guns were fired, and the salute, as it were, itself, in the air, was loosened and flew out to the breeze; in the same moment the military and volunteers gave a rousing cheer, and the National Anthem. The mounted officers on ground then rode towards his Royal Highness accompanied by his suite, and gave the lines and the salute. At the same moment the 60th Regiment wheeled into open column, right in front, and the whole marched past in quick time. After this the 60th Regiment fired the salute, and the mounted ranks opened out, gave a Royal salute, and then, ed in review order, the scene at this moment being the picture of a grand military display. The saluting band, and the ranks closed; and so the review, may fairly be classed among the most successful ever given in the army. The review was then given by the Prince of Wales, who, in the name of the King, conferred on Colonel Waddy his gratification. turning to a consensus. The Government and the Opposition, he denounced the action they had taken as nothing but unreasonable faction. They had been kept up all night; they had been in two divisions, with a majority of three in favour of the Government. When had passed a thing as that ever been seen in the British Parliament? When had the House of Commons ever disgraced itself in that way? Then came the question of the adjournment of the House. He was opposed because it would have to keep a portion of the House together, whilst the minority could parcel itself out in relays, and so wear it out? The capacity of Parliament was quite equal to such an emergency as this. A majority of 100 would give it the power to do so. He doubted it would involve its unanimous assent to a plan to meet the exigency. To the proposition of Mr. Robertson that there should be a compromise, he had nothing to say. He was in favour of the adjournment, but under whom he held office would accept such an offer, nor would the large body of members who supported the Ministers consent them to take any part in such a conference as was suggested. At 3 p.m.; the House adjourned. On Monday the 12th, Mr. Speaker entered the Chamber, and took his seat amidst cheers and counter cheers from either side of the House. A bill to authorise the West Midland Municipal Council to take land for the purposes of the Birmingham and Gloucester Railway, and The Western Keromine Oil Company's Bill was read a second time. — Mr. MARTIN moved the adoption of an address to his Excellency the Governor, in reply to his Excellency's message announcing his appointment. — Mr. MARTIN moved the adjournment of the House, on which Mr. MATTHEWSON rose and was commencing an address, when the members on the Government side of the House rose simultaneously and left the Chamber. — Mr. SPEAKER rose to quorum, present the SPEAKER adjourned the House.

On Monday, 13th, Mr. ROBERTSON rose and moved the adjournment of the House. He did this before any business was entered upon, in order to obtain the sense of the House upon the very extraordinary position the Government now occupied. They might search

English colonies, and they would not find an instance of a Government placed in a similar position. Their whole career during the present session had been nothing but one series of failures. In every step they were going wrong, and they were aware that they were doing worse than all by the proposition they made to destroy Parliamentary Government. As regards the four months' Supply the Opposition had condemned the taking of any such step, and they were now doing the same thing. Instead of giving, for these reasons, the Colonial Secretary had done nothing more than to abuse past Governments, and to glorify his own Ministry. He then proceeded to review the speech of Mr. Parkes, and to accuse himself from the charges mentioned by him, by that gentleman, and retorting, that the three heaviest defects they had suffered had been on his motion. These defects were—the appointment of Chairman of Committees, the railway policy, and the action of the Government in the matter of the Government one by one. He contended, that either they were of little value to the country, or that, where they were really important, they had been passed by the aid and co-operation of himself and those who supported him. He then proceeded to denounce and disparage the country with the Newspaper Postage Act; of endeavouring to gag the House by obtaining a four months' vote of credit, and thus preventing them from dealing with the Estimates; and lastly, of attempting to gag members by passing the motion on the supply of the House. The motion would never pass, but he and those who acted with him would take care that it should not even be put to the House. Mr. LUCAS was speaking in reference to the motion on the paper of that day, and endeavouring to show that the Government were not doing well. He was called to the state of the House. There being only sixteen members present, the House was adjourned.

On Tuesday, 14th, the House proceeded to Government House to present the address, in reply to his Excellency's message informing the House that the Government were desirous of governing the country. Mr. BURDEKIS moved the adjournment of the House, and was commencing his address, when Mr. MARTIN rose to claim the indulgence of the House whilst he made a statement in reference to the address. He said, "I am now addressing myself. Doing this in as brief terms as I could, I have to out that on the three several occasions upon which the House has been moved into Committee of Supply the Government had been met with votes of confidence, and that the Opposition had been unable to prevail. Other proceedings had been taken in consequence, so that up to the present time the Government had been unable to obtain any vote, and hon. members had every opportunity of showing that they were in favour of preventing any vote being arrived at. Thus, the Government were in this position. They had a majority of ten as admitted by the Opposition on the whole of the questions, but they were unable to obtain a majority of those attendance, and yet were unable to obtain the acts of the Opposition, to obtain a single vote in Supply. Only a few nights ago the House was told that some hon. members had ever before been known to do something of the kind, and the determination to repeat this until the Government showed Ways and Means sufficient to cover Supply. This, indeed, was the ground on which the Opposition were now making the statement of Mr. Samuel, and placing it by the side of that made by Mr. Chamberlain, was no substantial difference of figures, the only question of difference between the two being, not that the Ways and Means were sufficient to meet the ordinary expenditure, but that they were sufficient to meet the ordinary expenditure, and that the Treasury bills were to be met and paid for in one year. The real difference of opinion was upon the point, the Opposition saying that the amount would be sufficient to meet the ordinary expenditure, the Government holding that it was not incumbent on the House to pay the amount now, when the colony was in a state of depression, but that it would be better to wait until the depression was over, and the trade had somewhat recovered. In the face of the obstruction by hon. members, he had, with the sanction of hon. members who sat round him, given notice of a motion on the paper. He regretted the necessity for such a course, but he thought it was necessary for such a course to be taken, in order to avoid inconvenience and danger of adopting it; and he now rose to make a proposition, which, if adopted, would be necessary for moving a motion which had only been just made. This obstruction had been carried to a greater length than had ever before been known. In addition, it had been said that no reason had been given for the delay for a further period of two or three months, and in this view he now proposed a vote of credit for a shorter term. The Government would

MADE a vote for two months' Supply, which would enable the Government to carry on the Parliament again in the middle of March, when the visit of the Emperor would have ended. When they met at that time, the Opposition would have it in their power to defeat the Government, or in some other way to bring about the dissolution of the House. They talked about this, and wished for it. At present, support was not so strong as they were by a majority, it was not to be expected that the Government should stultify themselves by asking for a dissolution. He made this point, and said that the country might see that the Government were not so stupid as they were prepared to give way in order to prevent the continuance of the unseemly scenes which had been recently witnessed. In conclusion, he recommended that the Opposition should take till to-morrow to decide the question, and then should take. He moved the adjournment of the House. MR. ROBERTSON objected to the position taken up by Mr. Martin. Unaccompanied by a prorogation, the Government, the Premier might be accused to; but he would never consent to a prorogation, to be followed by a prorogation until the Estimates for the year were passed. The real cause of the obstruction was not so much that the Ways and Means were not equal to the expenditure, as that the £160,000 saved from the sale of the land was being applied to the expenditure of the year instead of being applied to the reduction of the deficit loan. If the Government would show that they could provide for the expenditure without using this balance, they would find no difficulty about giving a vote of credit from the Opposition. Until they could do this, a vote of credit would take every means in their power to prevent this balance from being made available. Under such circumstances they would consent to nothing so long as they could get a vote of credit. The paper, for they would never be coerced into anything, they wanted to go on with Supply. Let that be proceeded with, and votes of credit should be given from month to month as long as they were required; whilst an adjournment would be taken, and the money necessary for receiving the Prince would be assented to. Anything beyond this the Opposition would not concede. MR. MARTIN explained that he intended not to move the motion standing in his name; and that he had inadvertently used the word "proceed" in the course of his adjournment. MR. MACLEAY took no exception to the statement of the Attorney-General, as that gentleman had put the

the highest appreciation. I was your college tutor during the greater part of your student life, and I have been your friend, and, therefore, frequent and long-continued opportunities of knowing you. Your zeal and success in prosecution of your studies, in the University, in every department, and your high standing in the same, I have seen and I have rarely met with any student who has shown greater steadiness and industry.

On the 27th of March, 1840, Astronomie Royal of Vienna, thus testifies:—"My friend (Dr. Bailey) passed through my hands, and was distinguished by his progress in every respect through the University of Dublin. He was a student of mine, and I have seen him, and I have seen his papers, which are not compulsory, but by reading during the term, which is not compulsory, but by VOLUNTARILY continuing some years longer than usual in the University, he has been able to perfect himself. He showed a great deal of industry and study."
